HE CLOSED THE MEETING.

Sam Small Preached to Christian Endeavorers and Found It Discouraging.

There is a dense crowd as in the afternoon. Unctuous prayers and good singing of hymns to lively tunes prepares exhorter and auditor alike for what is to come. Rev. Mr. Small is on the platform to have his say, and well he justified his claims to be heard. He is just back on this side the mountains from a campaign in California, where he succeeded in converting a number of the worst of sinners, and he pardonably expects to have comparatively easy work on Chicago sinners that are known to be less sinful than any others in the world. But eloquent and earnest as was his sermon, it fell cold on his hearers. Not an amen was sounded, much less a shout heard. He warned sinners; there was, apparently, not a sinner in the audience. He called to repentance; there was, apparently, not a penitent man or woman in the crowd. All appeared to be saints. Once in a stage whisper, and aside to a gray-headed man on the platform, he said that to find the sinners he would have to go into the fair grounds. But he tried another test on the seeming saints before him. He stopped preaching and resolved the affair into an experience meeting. He announced four phrases that he proposed should be observed by all those that had experiences to relate. These were: 1. I know I am saved. 2. I think I am saved. 3. I know I am lost, & I think I am lost. One after another in the audience was asked to rise and say in what category he or she was, and to relate, in a word, an experience to prove it. For some minutes there was not a single rise to the preacher's hook, so variously baited. Then he railied the crowd and threw among them words hot, that he designed to be soul-searching. Still no one responded. He concentrated their thoughts by prayer and encouraged them with singing, when, behold! a woman arose in the back part of the meeting. She knew she was saved, because she felt a deep love in her heart. Next a man got up in the front part of the meeting, and he knew he was saved because he felt a righteons indignation at every form of sin. These examples were infectious, and for half an hour men and women rose in quick succession, and never before, probably, were together in one room so many undoubting saints. Not one but knew he or she was saved, and the reasone for the belief were many. Evidently they were perfectly satisfactory to the declarers thereof. Had the suspended roof of that pavilion been taken off and the fainest note of Gabriel's trump been heard in the welkin, that entire mass of saved humanity might have risen as one creature and gone, clothes and all, straight up into heaven. But for one thing. Rev. Mr. Small was there to put a damper on the confident saints. He was evidently tired, and likewise disgusted by the unbroken procession of men and women who needed no salvation. So be straightened himself up and pitched into them. He told them that the devils in hell believed as well as they, and yet that the devils trembled. And as it was his business to present, he hastened to close the meeting. They Want Reduced Rates.

convert sinners and there being no einners l'armers and their wives need the fair more than any other class. The way must be opened to them.
